Abby Believed

By Paula Puddephatt

Abby believed people. Believed in people. Trusted them, with a determined, rather than simply blind, faith.

In particular, Abby trusted loved ones. Family. Friends. Her long-term boyfriend, Craig.

Of course, Abby wasn't wrong exactly. Not in theory, anyway. And mistrust, distrust, that was destructive, right? It would be so easy to self-destruct. Especially for someone as tender-hearted as Abby. She needed to trust those around her, and she knew that she could. She really could.

Abby wasn't wrong to trust people. Was she?